Appendix - ADR Scheme Principles

The principles which must be met by WATRS are:

- Independence

It must be independent of water companies and any other stakeholder (e.g. a consumer advocate) with a conflict of interest.

- Fairness and impartiality

It must be able to take a neutral, objective and balanced view, and deliver outcomes based on clear policy/rules.

- Proportionality

It must undertake analysis and make decisions proportionate to the scale and nature of the problem.

- Consistency

It must ensure that decisions are clear and consistent from case to case.

- Transparency

It must ensure that decisions are public so that they are seen to be made without prejudice; highlight systemic failings in policy or practice; have a deterrent effect and drive service improvements. The process must, however, maintain the confidentiality of individual complainants.

- Effectiveness

It will meet its objectives and do so in a way that provides value-for-money through cost-effective, timely delivery.

- Accountability

It must be monitored and tested to ensure that it delivers efficient and effective outcomes for consumers, and that it is accountable to its users and the water industry.

- Accessibility

It must be available to all eligible complainants and easily available to consumers with different needs through the most appropriate channel (for example telephone, e-mail, website and letter); and it must ensure that its role is made clear so that consumers understand the process and know who to contact.
